THE PETTY FINEST WINE

19/20

My headliner, Les Clans, shows (a particular) level of elegance, coupled with lip-smacking precocity, so while Garrus is one for the cellar, Les Clans is ready to romance from the moment it is released. Near perfect in weight, timbre and balance, this is a glorious wine, and it can perform every duty from complex canapés to main course feasts! Where Garrus slows the conversation down so one can fully appreciate the constellation of flavours present, Les Clans skips along merrily, making it the definitive 'rich person's fast wine'. If you were left to your own devices, I could see Les Clans disappearing at an impressive rate of knots without ever tiring the taste buds or becoming repetitive. (Drink now - 2028)

A textural, driven and poised Cotes de Provence rosé. On the nose aromas of raspberries, currants, dried herbs and baking spices dominate. It's medium- to full-bodied with structure and balance. Delicious center palate with bright berry character and a textural development throughout. Lively finish with length. Drink now.

A very expressive and complex nose mixing aromas of exotic fruits and meadowsweet with vanilla notes tinged with toasted almond. A mouth characterized by a harmonious vinosity, an astonishing body for a rosé, an immense length and a finish of refreshing minerality. A gastronomic wine that will flourish with grilled fish or a thick roast veal chop surrounded by chanterelles.

Oak very powerful on the nose, with firm woody notes, lots of spice, a hint of vanillin and toast opening up in the glass to reveal some pretty bergamot, elegant elderflower and some exotic notes. The same progression of flavours on the palate revealing quite closed, textural, grippy, gravelly oak when cold opening up to some wonderful intensity and structure on the palate. Yes this is an oaky rosé, and maybe not to everyone's taste, but the intensity of texture and structure, with the complex combination of exotic fruit and a twist of salinity creates a rich and unctuous wine to be drunk now or for ageing.

WORLD'S BEST

Sommeliers' SELECTION

A multi-dimensional rosé; crushed bright red fruit, white flowers, stone fruit, gorgeous herbal notes, bitter orange, a touch of reduction and saline mineral, savoury nuances. Medium intensity with generous, creamy mouthfeel, almost Burgundian in complexity with clear rose, strawberry and raspberry tones precise and well defined. There's a textural structure from lees ageing and a long, saline finish balanced with herbs and fleur de sel.
